

As a class we find the skeleton keys beautiful. We acknowledge that they might not be visually attractive but we find them deeply meaningful. One might worry that if one endorses the view that everything meaningful is beautiful, then beauty will be very subjective because different people will find different things meaningful. But a response to this is that insofar as you can appreciate someone's else's connection to something, this thing can hold meaning for you and thus be beautiful to you. So taking on this view that everything meaningful is beautiful need not push one to be a subjectivist.